

I do not believe the FCC should implement Telephone Privacy Regulations that are less stringent than those Indiana residents presently enjoy via Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. Dinner hour had become plagued with telemarketers to the point of dreading hearing the phone ring. Since IN enacted their law, dinner hour (as well as Saturdays and Sundays) are enjoyable again. We were getting 10 - 15 telemarketing calls per week...and many more near holidays.

We've got our phone privacy back and we don't want to see it taken away for special interest marketing groups. Instructing the credit card companies and other financial companies to take our names off the lists they share with others did not help. It took Indiana's Telephone Privacy law to do it. It works!! Please don't 'Fix' it.
